The Red Lion at Whittlesford Bridge dates back to the 13th Century.
Home to plenty of nooks and crannies and low ceilings which sit comfortably alongside a 21st century glass Annex.

Throughout its 700 years of history, the Red Lion has been a haven of welcoming hospitality.
From providing a place of respite to destitute travellers in the 1200's, through to cementing its place in royal circles as King James I granted the Red Lion's first liquor licence.
In more recent times, it became the social hub for service men and women stationed at the nearby Duxford Airfield (now the Imperial War Museum).
Now, after extensive investment and refurbishment the Red Lion Hotel continues to open its doors to welcome in the contemporary traveller.
